Amendment unnecessary, as already dependent upon Claim 12

Retention of Claims 16 and 17:

Amendment unnecessary, as already dependent upon Claim 15

Retention of Claims 18 and 19:

Amendment unnecessary, as already dependent upon Claim 16

Retention of Claim 20:

To present as independent claim consistent with Argument herein

ARGUMENT

Amendment herein may have made some issues moot.

THE "CHANG" REFERENCES

The Examiner rejected Claims 3, 8 - 11, 13 and 20 as "anticipated by Chang", thus indicating a Sec. 102 Code reference. Apparently as the result of an oversight, no Patent No. was provided in the Office Action for "Chang", however. Nor was that reference included in the "Notice of References Cited". The comments concerning it are extensive and comprise matters of material impact upon the application which is the subject hereof.

Using, among a few other choices, "Chang" for field of "Inventor" and "Exercise" for field of matters presented in the disclosure, the undersigned found 33 patent titles among several hundred in the Boolean Quick Search sector of the Patent Office website which offered potential research value. None of them were pertinent. Virtually all, if not all, of the "Chang" references comprised various frameworks or treadmills, none of which incorporated stretchable cord or an exercise bar. There are occasional references to a Chinese name beginning with the letter "X", apparently as a Chinese variant of "Chang". In short, although the undersigned tried, so as to respond to the Examiner's holdings, all was to no avail. Nothing presented itself.

Had the Examiner's holdings with reference to Chang been valid, not that such is not a possibility, the claims presented in this response would have been different. As it is, Applicant cannot naively concede to cancellation of those claims.

THE "CHEN" REFERENCES

The undersigned commends the Examiner, however, for Sec. 102 insight into the "Chen" reference, U.S. Patent No. 6,648,804. The Chen exercise bar is, in general appearance, a far cry from Applicant's but does, indeed, appear to fall within Claims 1 and 4 of the subject matter hereof. In view of that, Applicant is prepared to amend in some manner to contravene the reference and already, despite some question about what latitude a valid "Chang" reference might offer, supra, some amending has already been done herein.

Applicant still has some reservation about Sec. 103(a), however, since it would appear that even considering Chen in view of Wedge, the invention disclosed herein offers considerable advantages unforeseen by Chan and Wedge contemporaries that should not be preempted by an obviousness holding. Until the "Chang" issue, supra, is resolved, it is not immediately clear how Applicant's claims should be arranged to overcome this one.

AMENDMENT'S EFFECT UPON THE NUMBER OF CLAIMS

The number of total claims has been reduced from 20 to 17 and the number of independent claims has been increased from two to three.
